Did Your Dream Come True?

Only one in ten Brits is currently in the career they dreamed of as a child, it has been found. More than nine out of ten admit they are 'totally dissatisfied' with their current job. ...(1)... Nearly two-thirds still harbour ambitions of pursuing their childhood dreams. ...(2)... But a lack of contacts, courage and confidence means less than a fifth of the UK workforce has taken active steps towards making a career change.

In other news, if anyone knows how we can become a chocolate taster or astronaut (or an outer space chocolate taster) please let us know. ...(3)... People in the financial sector, advertising and sales felt the least satisfied, the poll of 3,000 adults revealed.

A spokesman for Sedogo.com, which commissioned the poll, said: "We all know that life can get in the way of achieving our goals. ...(4)... Unfortunately, for various reasons the majority of us are unable to pursue it." The survey found that almost all adult Brits (98 per cent) had a 'dream' job as a child – with astronaut, fireman, lawyer, surgeon, police officer and politician as favourites. But by the age of 21, the realities of adulthood came by. What realities? ...(5)... It meant they would take 'any job whatsoever' to move on with their lives. It means as little as 10 per cent of today's workforce are in their ideal job. What's more, 66 per cent of folk daydream of 'starting afresh' but feel unable to do so.

- A) They said they would 'quit tomorrow' if they had the chance.
- B) Most of us had a dream job as a child.
- C) For example, financial problems and family restraints.
- D) Few of us have achieved what we dreamt about.
- E) Teachers, doctors and bus drivers were found to be the most content in their work.
- F) The majority have done so for more than ten years.

Royal Wedding: Kate Middleton Fashion Fever Hits NY

It used to be Michelle Obama, but now women across America are looking to another fashion icon for inspiration – Kate Middleton. Ever since her engagement to Prince William last month, US media have delved into her wardrobe with magazines and newspapers printing pictures of the future British royal in a portfolio of outfits. In New York, where fashion is a necessity rather than an option, her feather hats, knee length dresses, and fitted tweed coats have already sparked interest. Ask locals to describe the Middleton look, and the words “beautiful”, “elegant”, and “sophisticated” are frequently among the responses. But it's not just what she wears that is creating inspiration in this part of the world. Her hairstyle – chocolate, wavy, tumbling – is also starting to be emulated.

At Cutler Hair Salon on 57th Street, stylist Kelsy Osterman says dozens of women have been coming in and asking for a Kate Middleton cut. People get really inspired by all these big beautiful photos of her and I think the one thing they can try to obtain of that beautiful look is the hair. There could be 20 women in a day that ask for it.

Twelve blocks south from Cutler Hair Salon is another business seeing a boom because of the bride-to-be. The Natural Sapphire Company operates on the 20th floor of an office building. A transparent bullet proof screen welcomes visitors as they enter. It has the air of an office in overdrive, with staff scurrying around answering phones and typing away on computers. CEO Michael Arnstein said the Middleton-effect – specifically demand for jewellery modelled on her sapphire engagement ring – was leaving him exhausted.

“I’ve had four hours sleep,” he said. “We’re being pushed to the limits. We need more staff, we need more stones, we need more jewellers. It’s fantastic but we just can’t meet the demand. Kate Middleton has just created this massive market for us and its overwhelming. We’ve sold hundreds and hundreds of sapphires. Within hours of the engagement we were just inundated with orders.”

Ms Middleton’s ring consists of a large sapphire surrounded by small diamonds, and once belonged to William’s mother, Princess Diana. Prince William said he gave it to his fiancée because “it was right to put the two together”. The rings range in price from $1,000 (£635.80) to more than $100,000, depending on the size of the stone. The design seems to have been revived more than 25 years after the Princess of Wales wore it. A style that fashion-conscious women in Manhattan may have considered quite orthodox now seems to be experiencing a resurgence.

As for Ms Dougherty, she has no plans to invest in a ring but she hopes her new hairstyle will bring her plenty of luck. “Oh I love it, it looks amazing!” she cried. “Hopefully now I’ll find my prince!”

So will these Kate inspired trends last – or are they a passing fancy of Americans ahead of the big day in April? American Vogue’s European Editor Hamish Bowles believes Ms Middleton could have an enduring impact in Manhattan, and beyond. “I think she’s extremely elegant and that idea of being manicured and groomed and effectively pulled together actually resonates with New York women. There is a classicism in her choices that projects fashion but not outrageously so. I think what’s remarkable is that so early in the process she has found an identity of her own and that is something that will enhance her authenticity. This is someone we are going to be deeply compelled by for a long time to come.”
